SUBJECT: Elected Officials Delta Emergency Response and Preparedness Summit on June 26, 2006

We live in a region at risk of catastrophic flood disaster. The weakness of our levees and flood control systems has been the subject of headlines for months. At the same time, the federal and state emergency response agencies on which we would rely if a Katrina-style disaster were to befall us, have come under serious criticism for inadequate planning and coordination. In a crisis, our residents first turn to us to rescue, assist, and protect them. Are we, the elected leaders of the Delta region, ready to meet this challenge?

To assess our collective emergency preparedness, the Delta Protection Commission is convening a Delta-wide Emergency Response and Preparedness Summit on Monday, June 26, 2006, from 9:00 a.m. to noon, at the newly restored Isleton Conference Facility, located at 203 Second Street in Isleton, California. The summit format will be a facilitated discussion among emergency response professionals from our region that will evaluate our current response capabilities and point to areas where we might enhance our preparedness planning and coordination. Among the questions the experts will address are mass evacuation and sheltering, and cross-jurisdictional communication. Further opportunities to work together to address deficiencies will be discussed, including a possible Delta-wide Memorandum of Understanding for emergency response and preparedness.

The Delta is comprised of portions of three regions, five counties, and over a dozen cities. The Summit is a historic opportunity to reach across jurisdictional lines in recognition of the reality that in time of disaster we are truly interdependent.

Additionally, on-site parking is available for your convenience, and if you are interested, the local Historical Society will provide a tour of this facility immediately after the Summit.

Feinstein, Pombo Request Coordinated
Emergency Response & Evacuation Plan for Bay Delta
March 29, 2006

Washington, DC – U.S. Senator Dianne Feinstein (D-Calif.) and House Resources Committee Chairman Richard W. Pombo (R-Calif.) sent a letter to government officials today requesting the design of a comprehensive, coordinated emergency response and evacuation plan to implement should disaster ever strike California's Sacramento-San Joaquin Bay Delta. The Bay Delta levees are among the nation's most vital levees, protecting and providing water for 23 million Californians.

"The Bay Delta needs to be prepared with an emergency response and evacuation plan should a major levee breach imperil hundreds of thousands of people," Senator Feinstein said. "The lesson of Katrina has to be that we recognize potential threats to the lives of our citizens before they happen, and move aggressively to have a full plan in place to prevent panic and fatalities."

"We are doing everything humanly possible to identify and repair the weaknesses facing the Bay Delta levees," Chairman Pombo said. "However, an emergency response and evacuation plan must be put in place in case the unthinkable happens. We can not and will not let the devastation that occurred in New Orleans come to pass in the Bay Delta."

Chairman Pombo and Senator Feinstein directed their concerns and request of an emergency response and communications plan to Homeland Security Director, Michael Chertoff; Acting Director of FEMA, R. David Paulison; and the Director of California Office of Emergency Preparedness, Henry Renteria. The letter requests plans, capabilities, and preparations be made including: pre-positioning of materials during heavy rains, rapid response of government contractors and emergency personnel, immediate closure of levee breaks and coordinated evacuation routes for mass exodus.
